special to The New York Times
ITHACA, N. Y.. March 11—Cornell University released a list of eight organizations that "have contributed funds to Cornell during the past 10 years [and] appear on the list of organizations reported in the press to have had C.I.A. support."

The largest grants on the list were several from the Marshall Foundation from 1960 to 1963 totaling $436,000 to the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell. The grants were used to support progress international labor relations.

Others included a grant of $1,000 in May, 1966, from the Foundation for Youth and Student Affairs to support the Hohduras project of Cornell United Religious Work.

There were two gifts of $1,000 each in 1959 and 1961 from the W. Alton Jones Foundation to support the work of the Cornell Research Laboratory for the Disease of Dogs.

Cornell's vice president for public affairs, Steven Muller, said the university "has never sought nor received direct support from the Central Intelligence Agency, nor has the university knowingly received C.I.A. support from indirect sources."

He said the eight organizations "are legitimate foundations with substantial sources of funds other than money reportedly received from the C.I.A., and there is no evidence that funds which came from them to Cornell University were in any way C.I.A. related."
